Blue Mountain Clinic
FAMILY PRACTICE

Blue Mountain Clinic is one of the only non-profit, independent, and non-government funded family medical clinics in the US that fully integrates primary, reproductive, gender-affirming, and abortion care into its daily practice.

A LETTER FROM OUR BOARD PRESIDENT —

Dear Friends and Supporters,

2025 was a year of meaningful progress for Blue Mountain Clinic. With the dedication of our team and the steadfast support of our community, we continued expanding access to essential healthcare across Montana and the Rocky Mountain West.

We began the year testifying before the Montana House Judiciary Committee in opposition to HB 609, a bill that would have made it a crime to knowingly transport an unborn fetus to obtain an abortion within or outside Montana. Throughout the year, we built new partnerships with healthcare, community, and 2SLGBTQ+ organizations, strengthening our ability to connect, collaborate, and advocate for the people we serve.

We also invested in the future of Blue Mountain Clinic — hiring a new Medical Director, Dr. Claire Frost, strengthening our digital infrastructure, launching a redesigned website, and taking steps to ensure that information about our care and services remain accessible in an increasingly censored online environment.

The year culminated in a tremendous honor: receiving the Dr. George R. Tiller “Attitude Is Everything” Standard of Excellence Award from the National Abortion Federation. We are deeply proud of this recognition, which reflects the dedication of our team and the patients, supporters, and community who make this work possible.

As we look ahead, we carry that momentum with us. There is still much work to do, but 2025 reminded us that progress is possible when we stand together, build boldly, and remain rooted in our values.

With Gratitude,

Bryony Schwan

OUR COMMITMENT TO OUR PATIENTS AND COMMUNITY

Blue Mountain Clinic is dedicated to offering kind, high-quality, and fair healthcare to everyone — no matter their race, background, income, gender identity, sexual orientation, disability, appearance, age, or body size. We understand that people face many types of discrimination and we aim to support each person as they are.

We recognize that BIPOC and 2SLGBTQ+ communities have faced — and continue to face — unfair treatment due to racism, white supremacy, and sexism. This discrimination harms health and limits access to good care. We are committed to removing barriers and making healthcare accessible and equitable for all.

A LEGACY OF COURAGE, CARE & GENEROSITY

The Talbot family carries forward generations of commitment to reproductive freedom.

The story reaches back a century to Rosalie — affectionately known as “Honey” — Sue Talbot’s mother-in-law and Deborah Frandsen’s grandmother. As a college student in New York in the 1920s, Honey learned that her engaged roommate was pregnant. Knowing how profoundly an unintended pregnancy could change her friend’s future, Honey helped her find safe abortion care — and pawned the diamond pinky ring she had received for high school graduation to pay for it.

Decades later, when Deborah began volunteering with Planned Parenthood, she went to talk to Honey about the work. That was when Honey shared the story. Her quiet act of courage, long before reproductive freedom was openly discussed, revealed something the family had already been passing from one generation to the next: when someone needs care, you show up.

That conviction has traveled through the generations. Sue built a life around service and philanthropy, teaching her children that one of the best ways to become part of a community is to find a nonprofit doing meaningful work and volunteer. She saw Blue Mountain Clinic as exactly that kind of place — somewhere women could receive safe medical care and, as she remembers, “be cared for and treated beautifully” by people who would “hold your hand when it got tough.”

That conviction has traveled through the generations.

For the Talbot family, standing up for reproductive freedom is more than a cause. It is a family inheritance.

Deborah carried those values directly into the reproductive rights movement. She volunteered as a clinic escort, linked arms with other volunteers to protect access to care during clinic protests, served on the Planned Parenthood board and later became its Executive Director.

Generations standing together: The Talbot family’s commitment to reproductive freedom stretches back nearly a century

Advocacy eventually led her into policy and political work as she saw how closely reproductive healthcare and public policy were intertwined, and Deborah started teaching the next generation early. When Lily was a child, she once found her mother crying after learning about new restrictions on public funding for abortion. Deborah explained why she was worried. Lily disappeared upstairs — and returned carrying her piggy bank. It was Lily's first donation to the cause.

That early lesson became a lifelong one. Lily grew up around reproductive health advocacy, later participated in her school's Gay-Straight Alliance and helped friends connect with reproductive healthcare. Today, she is also a Blue Mountain Clinic patient — experiencing firsthand the compassionate, whole-person care her family has helped sustain.

Her cousin Juniper Davis found her own path into the movement as a teenager, serving as a peer educator at Planned Parenthood, helping other young people access information and care. She continued as an advocate and volunteer and ultimately served eight years on Blue Mountain Clinic's Board of Directors, helping steward the organization and its expanding mission.

Looking at the women gathered around her today, Sue doesn't hesitate when asked how she feels about seeing those values carried forward: "Proud of you, proud of you, proud of you."

As Blue Mountain Clinic prepares to celebrate its 50th anniversary in 2027, this family's story is also a reminder of what has sustained the clinic for nearly five decades. Volunteers have stood beside patients. Advocates have raised their voices. Board and community leaders have protected the mission, and generous donors have provided the resources that allow compassionate, evidence-based care to continue.

The Talbot family has shown up in all of those ways — generation after generation. Perhaps Lily describes that inheritance best: "It's been really interesting being part of a family who is morally convicted that women have rights — going back as far as the eye can see." That is how a legacy is built: one act of courage, one person cared for, one gift, and one generation inspiring the next.

Blue Mountain Clinic received the
Dr. George R. Tiller
"Attitude Is Everything"
Standard of Excellence Award from the National Abortion Federation

Dr. George R. Tiller was an American physician and late-term abortion provider who gained national attention as the Medical Director of Women's Health Care Services.

Tiller was fatally shot by an anti-abortion extremist in 2009.

"Trust women."

Words from our Abortion Patients

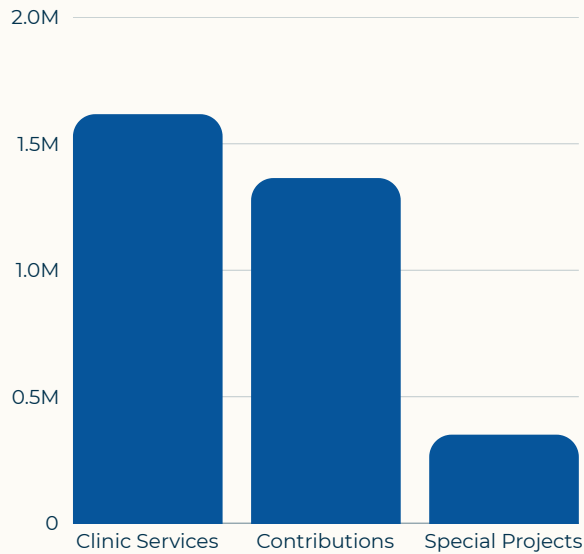

"From the moment I reached out, I felt my voice was heard."

"Thank you for supporting women so they do not feel trapped in dangerous situations."

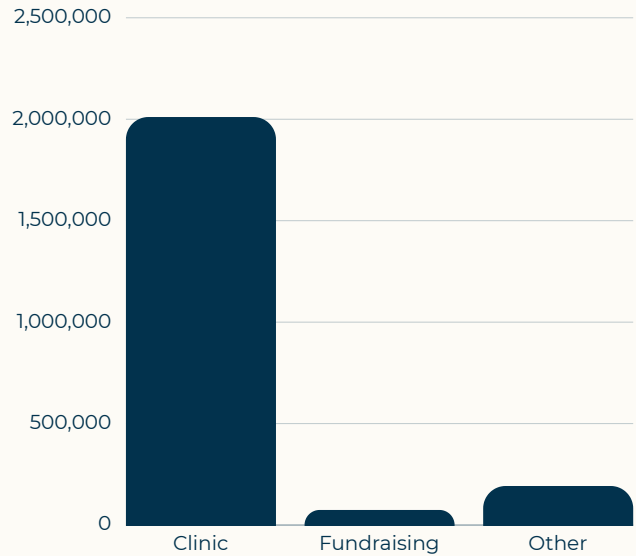

"Everyone at Blue Mountain Clinic was kind, and not being questioned about my decision made me feel asserted in my ability to decide what is best for me."

A Future Rooted in Care & Access

As we look ahead, we remain committed to protecting patient autonomy and providing compassionate, dignified care through our whole-person model of family healthcare — recognizing reproductive, gender-affirming, and abortion care as essential primary healthcare and affirming abortion as a normal, integral part of comprehensive medical care.

We will continue expanding access to high-quality care through stronger partnerships, telehealth services, and community outreach. As bodily autonomy remains under threat, Blue Mountain Clinic will continue to meet this moment with resolve, ensuring every Montanan has access to compassionate care, trusted information, and support.
